The Absorption Problem

- “It’s not what you take, it’s what you absorb”
- Water soluble nutrients dissolve in water and are easily absorbed in the intestines
 - B vitamins and vitamin C
 - Oligosaccharides
- Fat-soluble nutrients need the presence of fats (lipids) for absorption, and are not as easily absorbed as water-soluble nutrients
 - Quercetin: 2-24% is absorbed
 - Berberine: as little as 1% is absorbed
 - Coenzyme Q10: less than 5% reaches circulation

Solving the Absorption Problem with Cyclodextrin

- Cyclodextrins are compounds from plant starch that can be used to increase absorption, especially of fat-soluble nutrients
 - Produced through enzymatic breaking down plant starches
- Not a new idea – cyclodextrins used in the pharmaceutical industry for decades; accidentally discovered in 1891, but didn't come into wide use for pharmaceuticals until the 1970s
